

Warriors Favored Today

The concensus of opinion seems to be that Wakefield's game with Falls Church in Arlington today will be a low-scoring affair unless the field drains unexpectedly well, and Jaguar Coach Paul Weber isn't crying the blues over the prospects of her.

"I think it will be a good, rough tough ball game," commented Weber last night from the security of his Falls Church residence.

Since wet grounds usually holds the scoring down in football, the slippery field might have an equalizing effect as the Warriors square off against the underdog Jaguars, and that definitely would not help the Southsiders.

Falls Church has been gunning for this "big one" with Wakefield for a long time. The Jaguars are expected to pounce on any events which might favour their chances any, and a wet ball and two split-T teams is conducive to a lot of fumbling.

"The boys know they have a tough game and they're anxious," stated Weber. The Falls Church skipper considers the two lines about equal in size while the Wakefield backs are definitely bigger.

Don Gardiner, Henry Mayo and Quarterback Nolan Hill are the Jaguars worst enemies, according to Weber. Weber has personally scouted the Warriors and his plans for paralyzing the Wakefield attack seems to center around these backs, whom he considers most dangerous.

Weber refused to let loose with any information about his plans today. It is believed that the Falls Church mentor is hoping for a few good passes, and some hot running by his speedy ace-in-the-hole, Jim McIntyre, to put the Jaguars ahead early in the contest.

McIntyre is a halfback who has gained the respect of the Wakefield scouts by his quick, break-away type of running. McIntyre is likely to shake himself loose for a touchdown anytime he's got the ball, whether he's on his own 20 yard line or the Wakefield three. McIntyre represents Falls Church's one big threat to Wakefield's hopes of stretching its undefeated streak to five wins. He handles the Jaguar punting chores, he can pass from any position, and his running struck fear in the Wakefield coaches' hearts weeks ago.

By comparative scores, Falls Church just might pull off an upset if the local lads get over-confident and careless. The Jaguars beat Mount Vernon High by exactly the same score in which the Warriors turned the trick, 24-6. To the Jaguars, this game is far more important than the Mount Vernon tussle.

Wakefield's team isn't at full strength for the game; but Whitey Edwards' return should help the personnel problem although the fleet-footed halfback isn't likely to be used extensively.

This contest is the final opportunity for Wakefield to test and retest its now-famous belly series under actual fire before meeting the really tough teams. According to Warrior Coach Tank Johnson the belly plays have exceeded his fondest dreams so far and the use of the series, which is as much an addition to the regular Warrior split-T operation as the adoption of the single-wing would be, will supply good punch in the Wakefield mid-season attack.
